Artist Profile:
Having practised the art form since she was six years old, the Osaka University of Art professor has seen her work featured in galleries, collections, and advertisements around the globe. Not content with expressing the beauty of kanji on conventional canvases, she has expanded her repertoire to include sculptures, mixed media, and paintings. Her trademark style has been applied to title logos for television series, window displays for major brands, and even the Carrousel du Louvre in Paris. Through her endeavours, Sisyu symbolises the Japanese soul of Zen and propels the tradition of Sho into the new age.
